NOT ONLY did vandals destroy $5,000 worth of boat and rescue equipment owned and paid for by Carmel Highlands volunteer firefighters, they "devastated" rescue capabilities in Carmel Bay and waters south, according to California Department of Forestry fire captain Steve Benoit.

"The boat's just used for helping people, that's what bothers me," said Benoit, who was on duty at the Carmel Highlands Fire Station when the call came in Oct. 10. "Now we have nothing that we can respond in."

The vandals stabbed, stole and ruined equipment belonging to California State Parks lifeguards and the volunteer firefighters, according to the president of the CHVFF, Mark Lauren. While the two entities own their equipment separately, it was all stored in a structure on Whalers Cove. The state lifeguards' boat can be salvaged, according to Lauren, but the volunteer firefighters' boat was ruined.

The volunteer group has operated in Carmel Highlands since 1932 and uses the fire station there but is not affiliated with the CDF, Lauren said. The volunteers respond to more than 30 coastal incidents and cliff rescues a year.

"While we don't do a huge volume of calls, the calls we get are quite dynamic and very often life-and-death situations," he said. "They don't call us to get a cat out of a tree."

Any victims that would require the volunteers' Zodiac rescue boat — which has even been used to haul people from flooded homes in Mission Fields — will now have to wait for rescuers to paddle or swim out to the scene or for the Coast Guard boat to come around the point from Monterey.

"Who are they punishing?" Lauren asked. "They're punishing the people we serve. We're at a loss to understand or comprehend this act."

In addition to destroying the $4,000 boat, the culprits stole about $1,000 worth of rescue equipment and what they didn't want, they hurled into the water, according to Benoit. The volunteers lost their new exposure life vests (full-length life jackets designed to protect victims from the elements while keeping them afloat), smoke bombs, dye markers, flare guns, first aid kits, knives and tool kits.

"It made me sick," Benoit said.

It could take a month and a half to replace the slashed boat and stolen items, according to Lauren.

"These are funds that come out of a volunteer coffer," he said. "We're going to liquidate stock to pay for this, and it's not a good time to do that."

The volunteer group is a charitable organization with tax-exempt status, and would appreciate any donations the community can make, Lauren said. Anyone interested in helping can mail a check to CHVFF, attention: Mark Lauren, 73 Fern Cyn., Carmel Highlands, CA 93923, or call the station at 624-2374.

"The impact is way beyond the dollar value," he said. "It's a real punch in the stomach for the public and the fire safety community."

Activist/industrialist's fight against Moss Landing refinery recorded in Local History Room

A COLLECTION of industrialist Charles Kramer's notes, newspaper clippings, periodical articles and brochures concerning the Humble Oil Moss Landing oil refinery controversy have been given to The Henry Meade Williams Local History Room of Harrison Memorial Library.

Mr. Kramer was a key player in the opposition fight against Humble Oil Company's 1965 proposed oil refinery in Moss Landing which resulted in community action leading to Humble Oil's moving the refinery site to Benicia in 1966.

Council: Move mail boxes to improve safety at post office

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE CARMEL City Council decided Oct. 9 that the first step to solving the safety problems in front of the Fifth Avenue Post Office is to find someplace to move the mail drop boxes from across the street.

The council rejected a citizen's idea: to paint a crosswalk in the middle of the block for pedestrians, since so many people jay-walk across that block now. Instead, councilman Dick Ely suggested the city ask the postal service to move the mailboxes to a less congested location.

Ely and councilwoman Barbara Livingston argued that moving the mail drop boxes would dramatically reduce traffic on Fifth Avenue and create a safer place for people walking to the post office.

"We could get rid of congestion — 700 cars a day, that's a lot of traffic — by moving the boxes," said Livingston. "[Public Works Director] Jim Cullem took me on a tour of many places north and south of Ocean Avenue where the drop boxes could be placed."

With council members Gerard Rose and Paula Hazdovac recusing themselves because their businesses are close to the post office, Ely's suggestion passed on a 2-1 vote.

Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud voted no because the issue wasn't part of the work program already approved by the council for this year.

"This came up as a proposal to use a little paint in the middle of the street to see if it would help," McCloud said. "I can't support anything else at this time because the full council has already agreed upon a work program."

Ely also suggested the city move the parking spaces directly in front of the post office back four to five feet to improve access.

The Golden Years

Portable defibrillators are designed to save lives. In public places, such as airports or casinos, survival rates of cardiac arrest patients soar with the use of the devices. Reports show the defibrillators saved 53 percent of people treated in casinos and 40 percent of those treated on airplanes. The findings are so encouraging that doctors hope to see the portable defibrillators, costing approximately $3,000, become as common in public places as fire extinguishers.

Game show host Bob Barker has known that "the price is right" for the past thirty years. As host of the popular game show, "The Price is Right," he understands the importance of television game show in popular culture. But as Barker approaches his 78th birthday, he's starting to think about stepping down from his game show podium. Industry insiders disclosed that Barker was asked to sign a long-term contract but he opted for a one-year contract instead.

Suspect arrested in home invasion robbery

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

AN UNEMPLOYED, 29-year-old man who most recently lived with his grandmother in Pacific Meadows was arrested by sheriff's deputies Oct. 5 for the Sept. 18 home invasion robbery of Loma Alta resident Sharon Bates.

According to deputy Bill Cassara, Christopher Cassidy walked from the top of Pacific Meadows to Loma Alta, where he entered Bates' home. Wearing all black, including a ski mask that covered his face, Cassidy reportedly bound Bates while holding her at gunpoint, and then fled with her wallet and keys.

The suspect then ditched her car — a silver Volvo station wagon — on Mission Street in Carmel and used her ATM card.

"He tried to use the ATM card and was successful. He got the code from the victim," Cassara said.

Physical evidence from the Volvo — including hair samples — and materials gathered at Cassidy's Pacific Meadows home during a warrant search appear to link the suspect with the crime. Further forensic lab work must be done to positively link Cassidy to the car.

"He made some incriminating statements, but it's our job to corroborate statements with the physical evidence," Cassara said.

He credited the arrest to "good old gumshoe investigative work by deputy Dennis English and some of the deputies he works with."

The suspect was booking into Monterey County Jail on charges of residential robbery and burglary, forgery, fraudulent use of an ATM card and vehicle theft. Bail was set at $50,000.

Phony Hamilton surfaces at Chinese restaurant

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A LOUSY copy of a $10 bill turned up in a customer's change at the China Gourmet in Carmel last week, according to Carmel Police Officer Mike Calhoun. The woman didn't spot the bill until she got home, and the staff at the restaurant said they did not recognize the bill as a fake when they had it.

"It was very poor — it looked like it was just copied from a copier," Calhoun said. "The color was off, and there was no security band, nothing like that."

The texture did not feel right, according to Calhoun — a judgment backed up by a test that showed the bill was definitely not the genuine article.

After getting the bill Oct. 6, police asked the restaurant staff to go through the register drawer in search of other fake bills, but the $10 bill — 1999 series, number BB38504764 B2 A2 — appeared to be the only one received.

"The China Gourmet employees couldn't really tell it was counterfeit — that surprised me," he said. "They just didn't really notice."

Calhoun said the police department has not received any other reports of counterfeit $10 bills, leading him to believe it may be an isolated incident.

Nonetheless, Calhoun sent the imitation Hamilton to the Secret Service, which investigates and monitors occurrences of counterfeiting.

"They track the serial numbers of the bills because usually when someone makes a copy, there's a multitude of that same bill," he said.

The rush to the finish line of the 2002 Big Sur International Marathon is already on: 3400 entries already snapped up, leaving only 600 openings. Locals are encouraged to sign up immediately, or risk being left on the sidelines.

warning locals that they expect the April 28, 2002, marathon to sell out in a matter of days.

As of Oct. 11, only 600 spots remained for the marathon, which has a maximum capacity of 4,000 entries under Caltrans restrictions. Race director Wally Kastner encouraged locals to hurry up and commit.

Runners from all 50 states signed up last year — making the race the number one destination marathon in the country, according to Kastner — and organizers expect a replay this year.

"We want to make sure they get in here and get signed up if they want to run," he said. "We want people from Monterey County who want to run to be able to run."

Or if running 26.2 miles doesn't appeal, spots in the other events are still available, including:

- 147 teams for the marathon relay;
- 75 entries in the 21-mile PowerWalk, which maxes out at 550;
- 1,232 entries in the 10-Mile Walk (maximum 1,800 walkers); and
- 2,500 in the NewsChannel 46 5K, which features and benefits local schools.

Auction is final hope

For those who insist on dragging their feet or want to try their luck later, the Big Sur International Marathon will auction off 100 spots after the marathon sells out, according to Kastner. He credited the Twin Cities Marathon — BSIM's sister marathon — with the idea. The minimum bid will be set at $135, $50 over the regular $85 registration fee.

During the silent auction, organizers will post the current bid on the run's website at www.bsim.org and will release the names of the 100 highest bidders on the first of January.

"All of our profit goes to charity, so this will boost that," Kastner said.

Marathon officials distributed an unprecedented $145,000 to local charities Oct. 10, according to Kastner. That amount topped last year's contributions by $35,000 and 1999's gifts by $65,000, he said. Per the event's charter, half goes to Big Sur organizations and the remainder is distributed to Peninsula charities that support the marathon, according to Kastner.

Those interested in participating in any BSIM event can sign up online at www.bsim.org or by picking up an entry form at The Treadmill at the Crossroads and in Monterey, the marathon office on Carmel Rancho Blvd. or Fleet Feet on Lighthouse in New Monterey. Marathon organizers can be reached at 625-6226.

California-American Water Co. manager Terry Ryan resigns

JUDY ALMOND RETURNING ON INTERIM BASIS

By PAUL MILLER

AFTER JUST 16 months on the job, the manager of Cal-Am's Monterey division, Terrence Ryan, has resigned over "quality of life issues," according to the company's vice president for operations, Judy Almond.

The surprise resignation came at a critical juncture for the water company, which is struggling to comply with a state order to cut pumping from the Carmel River. The California Public Utilities Commission is nearly finished with a detailed examination of "Plan B" — a collection of possible remedies for the area's chronically inadequate water supply that does not include building a new dam on the upper Carmel River.

Terry Ryan

"I'll be spending more time in the Monterey area, concentrating on the political issues, and we'll be bringing in an interim manager to run the water operation," said Almond, who was Ryan's predecessor.

She said Ryan had resigned last week, but she did not know if he had accepted another job elsewhere.

The interim manager will be Wayne Morgan, an official with Cal-Am's parent company, American Water Works, in New Jersey.

According to Almond, Morgan has served in 22 of the 23 states where American Water Works has

"Cal-Am is committed to protecting the Carmel River, the steelhead trout, the red legged frogs and the other plants and animals. But we're also committed to giving this community a reliable water supply," Almond said.

Plan B, which includes desal, water reclamation and groundwater recharge as well as an increase — on paper — of the legal water supply by 3,000 acre-feet per year, is set to be finished later this year, according to PUC officials. No new water for development is included in Plan B.

It will then be submitted to the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District for incorporation into the environmental analysis of the proposed Carmel River Reservoir.

Challenger on water board ballot will fight for Chesshire's spot

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A MONTEREY resident has decided to challenge incumbent Ron Chesshire for a seat on the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District Board of Directors. Judi Lehman will run against current director Chesshire in the Nov. 6 election — and she's already picked up substantial financial support.

Lehman did not return phone calls from The Pine Cone, but examination of the campaign statement she filed with the Monterey County Elections Department shows she received $5,637 in campaign contributions in August from people including:

- water board director Zan Henson;
- Carmel City Councilwoman Barbara Livingston;
- Howard Brunn; and
- Linda and Clayton Anderson.

Chesshire said he knows little of Lehman, and has only faced her once during a candidates' session at the library during which she pushed conservation.

But the Peninsula has one of the best water-savings rates in the state, Chesshire said. "What we really need is a new storage system and retrieval system."

Chesshire, first elected to the board four years ago by residents in Monterey, Sand City, Seaside and Del Rey Oaks, chose to run again because of the "need to keep some balance and sanity in what's going on."

"I just want to continue bringing a plan before the voters that will provide current and future needs for water for the community," he said. "And we need to manage the current resource we have with some fairness and common sense."

Chesshire, a father of three who lives in Monterey with his wife and teenage daughter and works as the business representative for Carpenters Union Local 605, has been a Peninsula resident for more than 45 years and believes he knows his constituents' needs.

"I figure I'm a voice for the segment of the community that wants to seek a solution

Alvin Edwards

— that wants water for current and future needs and doesn't want to play any games," he said.

Director Alvin Edwards currently occupies the other seat up for election, and is running unopposed.

"We're really going to have to start making some decisions," Edwards said. "I'm hoping that in the next four years we can have some projects on the books and get moving on them."

Edwards said he believes most of the water solutions outlined in Plan B — the state's proposed alternatives to a dam on Carmel River that includes desalination, ground water recharge and reclamation — are doomed to fail.

Desalination will be too expensive to support and the whole project might not even yield enough water, he said, "but I think we can probably get a little something good out of it, like aquifer injection."

Edwards, a firefighter with the Seaside Fire Department, lives in the city with his wife and two sons. He thanked Seaside residents for their support.

"Thanks to the people in Seaside who have faith in my ability that no one ran against me," he said. "I hope I have satisfied my constituency, and I'll continue to do the job for the next four years."

Water board to consider new water transfer rules

THE MONTEREY Peninsula Water Management Board of Directors will discuss the water transfer credit program during the regular meeting slated for 7 p.m. Oct. 15 at Monterey City Hall in council chambers.

The agenda includes discussion of Ordinance 101, which will modify the current program and incorporate safeguards to prevent an increase of water use beyond the projected amount, according to water district staff; it should also ensure more reasonable estimates of water use at the donor site. Water transfer credit applications have been suspended until Nov. 20.

The board will also consider adopting a resolution urging the city of Monterey to assert its pueblo water rights.

For more information on the water management district or its agenda, call 658-5600.

be reached that will remove the threat of litigation and allow the project to proceed."

Potter would not say exactly what was involved in the negotiations, although specific issues affecting residents along Highway 1, including viewshed protection and tree removals, were among the concerns cited by Gianascol and her clients.

The deadline for Gianascol to challenge the climbing lane in court was Tuesday, but Potter said the county had agreed to extend the deadline to allow the negotiations to continue.

"There has been a lot of discussion between Gianascol and [county counsel] Adrienne Grover," Potter said.

If an agreement with Citizens for Hatton Canyon is reached, that would leave Pacific Grove activist David Dilworth as the sole formal opponent to the climbing lane. His appeal was the only one remaining when the coastal commission voted Wednesday night. He didn't attend the commission meeting and did not submit any further comments indicating what he would do next.

The coastal commission made its decision about 7 p.m. Wednesday after an exhausting day dealing with statewide Local Coastal Plan issues and the proposed Watsonville High School.

Several county officials, including public works director Lew Bauman, attended the meeting to provide evidence, as did a private biologist and a Caltrans planner. None of their testimony was needed.

"I had a chance to thank the governor, Fred Keeley and county public works and that was about it," Potter said. "The whole thing took two minutes."

If everything goes well, construction of the climbing lane could be underway "before the rainy season," Potter said.

The climbing lane became the county's preferred project after the Transportation Agency for Monterey County voted in March 1999 to shift funding for the Hatton Canyon Freeway to other highway projects.

Red Cross offers class on responding to terrorism

THE CARMEL Chapter of the American Red Cross and the Carmel Fire Department are offering an intensive training session on how to prepare for biological, chemical, cyber or explosive terrorism.

The normal six-week Community Emergency Response Team training program will be condensed into a two-week session because of the national concern about possible acts of additional terrorism in the U.S.

"We are the first people to teach ordinary people about what they should do in their own homes to prepare for terrorism," said Russell Coile of the Carmel Red Cross, a former adjunct professor who worked on the terrorism research project at the Naval Postgraduate School.

The two-day classes — conducted on two consecutive Saturdays — will also cover hurricanes, floods, fires and earthquakes.

The first set of terrorism response classes will be offered Oct. 20 and Oct. 27. Additional dates are Oct. 27 and Nov. 3; Nov. 10 and Nov. 17; and Nov. 17 and Nov. 24.

The cost will be $30 and class size will be limited to 20 participants. To register and find out more information, call the Carmel Red Cross at 624-6921.

New CAA members Carvell and Tsouris honored with show

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

TWO NEW members were accepted into the Carmel Art Association following a juried competition in July.

Fred Carvell of Carmel Valley and Michel Tsouris of Moss Landing will have their work displayed at the CAA galleries now through Nov. 7.

Carvell, a contemporary landscape artist, verges on the abstract, but does not depart from recognizable natural elements in his compositions. By employing layers of acrylic paint to acid-free paper fixed to board, he achieves luminous, small-scale paintings. A painter for more than 30 years, he was chosen for his most recent paintings — a series inspired by horizon lines.

Tsouris, on the other hand, uses oil, wax and tar on canvas to create textural images born of the subconscious.

Endeavoring to keep herself intellectually removed in the earliest stages of her painting process, Tsouris works on a number of canvases, experimenting with process and form, content and subject until patterns begin to emerge. She also works with gouache on paper. Tsouris's work has been shown in museums and galleries in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago, San Francisco, Ohio, Delaware and West Virginia.

The CAA is open daily from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and is located on Dolores between Fifth and Sixth avenues, Carmel-by-the-Sea. For information, call 624-6176.

medical team led by one of the nation's leading experts on breast cancer.

Pamela Craig, M.D., medical director of Community Hospital of Monterey Peninsula's new $2.4 million Breast Care Center, is a seven-year breast cancer survivor herself. She most recently practiced at Orange Coast Memorial Medical Center's renowned breast cancer center, and is a contributor to the most complete textbook on breast cancer ever published, "The Breast, Comprehensive Management of Benign and Malignant Disease."

"We are very fortunate to have someone of Dr. Craig's stature," said Stephen Packer, M.D. and CEO of CHOMP. Pointing to her "collaborative and coordinated approach" to prevention, early detection, breast-sparing surgery, radiation therapy, new clinical trials and patient support, Packer added, "We will be able to demonstrate to our community that there is no need to leave the Peninsula for responsive, timely and comprehensive treatment of breast cancer." The new center is located at 1035 Cass St. in Monterey.

Craig described the benefits further: "It will be run by experts with the experience of those ordinarily found in big-name hospitals, but without the large volume, thereby providing patients with highly effective and very individualized care."

Each patient will receive the attention of a team that includes radiologists, pathologists, surgeons, medical and radiation oncologists, a "nurse navigator" to provide support to the patient and handle logistics of the process, as well as Craig's expertise. A breast cancer program director, Susan Sandlin, will oversee links with the hospital's cancer center, resource center, support groups, and lifestyle and nutrition counseling, along with general operations.

"It takes a village to deliver good treatment for women with cancer," said Craig.

State-of-the-art facilities include two very high-resolution ultrasound and four mammogram machines, along with a newly developed computer-assisted detection unit.

"Together with the radiologist's extensive experience, this computer will double check the diagnosis," she explained, citing a recent study showing that combination is more accurate.

Mammography films will be examined right away, making results available within 48 hours. If there is an abnormality, complete testing — ultrasound, needle biopsy, etc. — can be done in one visit, with results available also within 48 hours, according to Craig.

She pointed out that "most of the 'somethings' found are benign. Now the radiologist has more tools to indicate where the potential problem is and the pathologist has a better understanding of how cancer cells behave, even differentiating between more- and less-aggressive cells."

The hospital has also recruited radiologist Susan Roux, M.D. "She is a nationally recognized expert at breast imaging," Craig said. "And she's like me — she eats, sleeps and breathes this stuff."

(Roux, who was featured on ABC's "20/20," has been advising the project coordinators, on equipment purchases and related issues.)

The impetus to create a center came in large part from the Breast Cancer Action Group of the Monterey Peninsula, under Nancy Porteous Thomas and Jackie Pierce, which established an endowment for it. Craig was invited by CHOMP to speak at an early planning retreat in April 2000 and the relationship evolved from there.

"The hospital is investing in this because they are listening to what women want in this community," she said. "And we want them to have a comfortable, soothing, positive experience when they come here, without the usual high level of anxiety."

Craig was diagnosed with breast cancer at age 47, "totally out of the blue" with no prior family history, she said. "My greatest joy in life is helping people understand breast cancer issues. I see women come in with swollen, frightened eyes because of their high level of anxiety. When I see them go out smiling, after spending time talking with them, that's the reason I get up in morning."

A benefit for the new center is scheduled for Oct. 17 at Saks Fifth Avenue.

EVENING OF FASHION, FOOD AND WINE TO FIGHT BREAST CANCER

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

SAKS FIFTH Avenue is teaming up with 20 fine restaurants and 15 local wineries to make it easy for folks to do something good. All proceeds from the Oct. 17 food, wine and shopping extravaganza, "Fashion Targets Breast Cancer," will go directly to Community Hospital's new Breast Care Center, scheduled to open next January (see story previous page).

In addition, Saks will also donate 2 percent of all its sales between Oct. 17 and Oct. 21 to benefit the local cause.

The benefit is a wonderful opportunity for locals to sample some of the best food and wine from the area while listening to great music, said Catherine Bartels, general manager of Saks Fifth Avenue, Carmel.

Kenny Stahl and David Morwood Jazz will both be performing as people stroll through the two Saks buildings sipping wine and tasting gourmet hors d'oeuvres from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Oct. 17.

The $60 ticket price also includes a martini bar, nonalcoholic beverages and coffee from Carmel Valley Coffee Roasting Company and Dakota Coffee House, in addition to the hors d'oeuvres, wine and entertainment.

Leon and Sylvia Panetta, the honorary chairs of the event and Dina Ruiz, spokesperson for the fundraiser, will attend, as will Pamela Craig, M.D., the medical director of the new breast care center.

Last year, the Saks event raised more than $15,000 to fight breast cancer. Organizers hope this year will be an even bigger success.

"People are excited to see a lot of the chefs from local restaurants, the general managers from restaurants and to be able to taste a lot of local wine," Bartels said.

Some of the participating restaurants include: Casanova, Marinus at Bernardus Lodge, Pacific Edge at the Highlands Inn, Anton and Michel, PortaBella, Patisserie Boissierie, Carmel Creamery and Caffe Napoli.

Local wineries also taking part in the event include: Joullian Vineyards, Chalone Vineyards, Durney Vineyards, Jekel Vineyards and Bernardus Winery.

Tickets will be available at the door, or can be purchased in advance by calling 655-4506.

Sunset bonds for sale; council gives go-ahead for groundbreaking

■ Officials happily surprised by low interest rate for bonds

By TAMARA GRIPPI

HOURS AFTER the City of Carmel's $9.9 million bonds went on sale this week, the Carmel City Council was able to tie up all the loose ends of the Sunset Center renovation project and unanimously award the $16.6 million construction job to Roebbelin Contracting.

Champagne was in order after the meeting as city council members toasted the dedicated members of the Sunset Center of the Arts, which has already raised $11.65 million toward the $21 million renovation.

Council members were pleased to hear some good news from their financial consultant, Tom Gaffney of Bartle Wells Associates, who said the lowest bidding broker, Stone and Youngberg, was able to provide an even better interest rate on the bonds than the city had anticipated.

Competing against six other firms, Stone and Youngberg offered 4.73 percent interest — instead of the anticipated 5 percent — which means the city's annual debt

'Even though the rest of the country was experiencing difficulties, circumstances did work to benefit Carmel.'

— Rich Guillen

service will be $611,000 instead of $650,000.

"It's a savings of $39,000 a year," Gaffney said.

Included in the $9.9 million bond issuance is a $3.45 million 'special call provision,' which the city hopes to pay back through fundraising efforts within the next three years. If the city is successful, it can go back to its original plan of paying an annual debt service of approximately $424,000 for the 30-year term, the same amount which went to pay off Vista Lobos Park until that debt was retired in

Carmel City Administrator Rich Guillen called the $39,000 a year a "significant savings."

"In this business, timing is everything," he said. "Even though the rest of the country was experiencing difficulties, circumstances did work to benefit Carmel."

Gaffney told the council that Stone and Youngberg was given a list of 25 local investors who wanted to purchase the Carmel bonds.

"If you get local people to invest in the local community it serves everyone much better," Guillen said.

The council also made short work of other action items needed to get the renovation project underway.

Voting unanimously, the council approved:

■ a $51,000 contract with ATC Associates Inc. to handle the monitoring of hazardous material abatement during the renovation;

■ an agreement to pay the Architectural Resources Group $301,400 for the design and management of the renovation through the construction phase of the project; and

■ the establishment of a Sunset renovation deposit account and a reserve fund.

Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud thanked all the people — "too numerous to count" — who have worked over the past nine years "to shape the project, raise the funds and plan for future uses for the revitalized Sunset Center project."

"All have the same goal — to ensure Sunset remains a centerpiece in our community to promote the performing arts for future generations," the mayor said.

A groundbreaking ceremony is scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Oct. 24 at the theater's west parking lot in front of the entrance.

Friends of Ron Weitzman honored him at the Clark Foundation: Diane Elliott, Marilyn Anton and her husband, former Superior Court Judge John Anton, Diane's husband Chuck and Dolores Gunia.

The Redwings benefit put Rita Ferri, Kimara Gornowski, auction chair Elizabeth Clifton and Beth Walker in a merry mood.

Parents, be honest: Did you ever get on your knees at 3 a.m., in tears, begging your 7-year-old to tell you why she was bouncing off the walls, refusing to fall asleep?

Believe me — you, too, would have found my very rare, single-night stay with friends in the Big City, painfully memorable if you had been forced to:

— get out of bed during the night repeatedly, each time just as your eyelids demanded they stay shut;

— go up and down four floors of steep stairs, in order to take the "child" to the garden (not that she needed it, of course);

— endure a chilly wind while dressed with only a jacket and bare legs, made chillier by sleep deprivation; and finally, for the coup de grâce, — withstand a surprise attack from a sprinkler system that had you surrounded, giving new meaning to the term "cold shower."

Give me a human kid any day ...

THE CELEBRATION by the Clark Foundation honoring "community treasure" Ron Weitzman, was aptly titled, "That's the Spirit," given the good works Ron has done over the years ...

Held at the Elks Club, it was efficiently organized by Morley Brown with her trusty team of Donna Jett, Flo Snyder and others. Emcee Lee Early cracked up guests with one-liners while Patricia Ramsey kept Lee's wife, Artie, busy ... Speakers included Congressman Sam Farr's wife Shary and County Supervisor Dave Potter, while Jackie Craghead sang instead, beautifully ... Foundation board member June Duran-Stock and hubby Morgan caught up with many of their friends ... Temple Elliott's been losing sleep over lack of food for his favorite group, the Salvation Army ... The very-married publisher, Pat Keil, was escorted by the handsome Colin Keil — her 12-year-old son ... Others there included Saul Weingarten, Celia Weiss, Julie Ehrenberg, Joyce Stevens, Anne Flynn, Lyubov Brown, Marilyn Gustafson, Diane & Chuck Elliott, former Superior Court Judge John Anton and wife Marilyn ... Former Carmel mayor Ken White & wife Jean proudly shared details of their new puppy ... On 9/11, Erl Lagerholm was on the French Riviera after sailing around in Greece ... Al Ham reported that his popular daughter, Pam Ham, just married Corey Butler ...

Daughter Elizabeth chaired the event's auction ... Karen Neely, new executive director, was a volunteer for nine years and on the board for eight ... Daughter Kristy Neely, a vet tech, runs the South County facility ... Rita Ferri caught up with friends Kimara Gornowski and Beth Walker ... Others there included Annette Brannon, Claudia Massa, board member Michelle Beagle.

'THE COUNT OF ONE' MAY BE DOWN, BUT NOT OUT

By BEVERLY HILL VAN JOOLEN

CARMEL-BY-the-Sea's Festival of Firsts is a theatrical treasure trove. It is the working playwright's equivalent to a jackpot, and this year's winner is author and playwright, Gary L. Blackwood.

The national contest began in 1977 and grants the opportunity for the winning play to be staged, complete with costumes and set design. In addition, the playwright receives $1,000.

"The Count of One" concerns a baggage-laden hypnotist, her psychic-using-secretary, and their new patient who is mentally harboring the tortured soul of an historical assassin.

The plot was inspired by a documented case study, and while incorporating past life regression into a script is an intriguing premise, executing the entire play from a psychiatrist's couch is tricky. So is the genre of dramatic comedy. In this case, the play is too heavy to be funny but contains too many gags to be taken seriously.

There are some other problems with the script. The initial theme is judgment, but it morphs into something closer to redemption with nothing in between to bridge the ideas. Also, the characters lack clear definition and purpose. The inconsistencies in their personalities and the ricocheting dilemmas keep the audience from fully investing in their lives, challenges and futures.

However, with the help of a dependable cast and crew, director Robin McKee delivers a clean, not engaging show. It is staged this year at The Carl Cherry Center for the Arts, where the intimacy of the theater helps establish the set. The scenic design, by Nicole Anne Bryant, is detailed and dimensional. Costumes are by Rhonda Griffith and lighting is by Ron Shwedel.

In his first role since high school, Jeremy Patterson is smooth and exact as Stuart, the patient. A bank teller from St. Louis, Stuart undergoes hypnosis to cure his neck pain and nightmares, only to discover he is channeling the spirit of the infamous southerner, John Wilkes Booth.

His therapist, Diane (Jill Jackson), is convinced he's simply over identifying with President Lincoln's assassin, but after a few sessions, she begins to reconsider. Jackson is known for immersing herself in her roles, but she doesn't get the opportunity to wrap her talent around Diane. The character is just too scattered.

Diane's secretary, Naomi (Virginia August), disagrees with Diane's conclusions about Stuart. She suspects the spirit of Booth is actually living in their new patient, and she's determined to make a believer out of Diane. August is skillful — and hers is the most consistent character — but here again the writing lacks focus.

The last third of the play seems more like an infomercial for reincarnation than a theatrical production. However, this is a first run for the show and presumably, the first opportunity for the writer to see his concept come alive. "The Count of One" isn't down for the count, it just needs to take five. Quills Split.

Others there included Erin Mitchell, Josh Harwayne, Don & Alison Imamura, and Annette Jankoski ... As he drove up in his golf cart, Jerry King let out a sigh and said, "Glad that's over!" Media billionaires exert profound world influence

TWO LONG-time journalists, who both taught journalism after retirement, have written a book, "Outrageous Fortunes — Media Billionaires and How They Change World Culture," (Jackson Press, Carmel, $14.95) which gives readers an inside look at well known publishers the world over.

Carmelites Rod and Alma Holmgren will discuss and sign their book at the Books and Dinner gathering at the Thunderbird Bookshop, 6 p.m., Thursday, Oct. 18.

The book deals with 30 American and 17 foreign multi-media billionaires who have built their fortunes on the information-entertainment complex — all of them, in the Holmgrens' opinion, "key shapers of American society and culture and even world culture."

The Holmgrens point out that with news-entertainment mergers, entertainment now overshadows information, a thought echoed by their friend, Studs Turkel, author of "Working," and "Hard Times," who says the Holmgrens have scored a bull's eye with their book.

"In the tradition of George Seldes' 'Lords of the Press,' written almost a century ago, Rod and Alma Holmgren target today's media moguls, who are even more arrogant in their putsch to lobotomize the American mind," Turkel is quoted on the book jacket.

The Holmgrens refer to Max Frankel's New York Times Magazine article concerning the merger frenzy of the mid-1990s (the alliance of Time-Warner-Turner, Viacom buying Paramount Studios, Disney Studios taking over ABC, AT&T buying TCI, and the merger of CBS Network-Viacom-Blockbuster-Paramount, to name a few.) Frankel believes that "combine or die is the theory now driving the media business."

With these mega-conglomerates, the cultures of many countries have been affected. Chapter by chapter, "Outrageous Fortunes" tells the story of the 37 billionaires who control the news-entertainment industries.

In the final chapter, the Holmgrens ask if we can hope for media that will improve our culture, rather than abuse and degrade it. And they offer five solutions that make a lot of sense.

Rod Holmgren was a reporter for a good part of his life — mostly in radio news in various parts of the country. In World War II he was a regional director of the domestic Radio Bureau of the Office of War Information. After the war he was editor of The Union, a labor paper with a circulation of 90,000.

Alma Holmgren worked on a newspaper in Evansville, Ill. and later did editing and book, play and movie reviews for the San Francisco News.

Both hold master's degrees in journalism from U.C. Berkeley, and both went into teaching journalism when they retired from writing: Alma taught at Contra Costa College for 16 years, and Rod taught at Monterey Peninsula College for 20 years, during which time he wrote a text, "The Mass Media Book," which was published by Prentice Hall.

Following retirement from MPC, Rod taught newswriting and editing at the Graduate Institute of Journalism in Beijing, China for a year and a half, ultimately writing a textbook that was translated into Chinese. Alma accompanied him on his last trip to China when he was a guest of the Beijing Broadcasting Institute.

On the home front, Rod has lectured for Elderhostel's arts and humanities seminars on changes in the media. Ben Bagdikian, author of "The Media Monopoly," and a friend of the Holmgrens, encouraged them to write a book of media mogul biographies, which they have done in spades in "Outrageous Fortunes."

Dinner and the talk at The Thunderbird Bookshop, Barnyard Shopping Village, Carmel, costs $17.50 per person, and reservations must be made by Monday, Oct. 15 by calling 624-1803.

This is the first of the Thunderbird's very pleasant Books and Dinner evenings on the patio following a summer hiatus. Summer didn't come, but Books and Dinner has arrived.

The dinner will be prepared by Jason Wright, chef of the soon-to-be-opened Bahama Billy's in The Barnyard.

PUNCH & PUNDITS Literary Tea, set for 2 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 21 in the social hall of the Church of the Wayfarer (corner of Lincoln and Seventh, Carmel-by-the-Sea), will present Bill Bates, The Pine Cone's own cartoonist, as guest speaker. Sponsored by The Friends of Harrison Memorial Library, SURGING WAVES, ripping currents, howling winds, freezing waters, exposed rocks, capsized boats — is it any wonder sea kayaking has such a following? It's a popular sport on the Monterey Peninsula.

All sports require great skill, but kayaking requires a strong sense of survival, too. In "Sea Kayaking Safety & Rescue," author John Lull outlines the skills and techniques required to successfully handle these and other potentially life-threatening dangers of the sea.

Lull, who lives on the coast 30 miles south of San Francisco, is qualified to instruct those who are planning to take up this formidable paddle sport, or who already have experience on the sea. He has competed in open sea kayak races and kayak surfing contests, and has extensive teaching experience as a Coastal Kayaking ACA instructor trainer. He is a Tsunami Ranger.

Lull says, "The best approach to safety at sea is to learn how to handle what the sea can throw at you." Profusely illustrated with black and white photos, Lull's book demonstrates all manner of rescues: assisted deep-water rescues, self rescues, rescues in surf and ocean rock gardens — even how to do the Eskimo roll. But weather and sea conditions, tides and currents, dealing with boat traffic and risk assessment are all included in the book, and much more.

The 216-page trade paperback retails for $16.95. It is available at some local bookstores, but if you can't find it, write to the publisher, Wilderness Press, 1200 Fifth St., Berkeley 94710, or call (800) 443-7227.

Passionfish the home of creative pairings, new menu daily

WERE ALL these people striving to jump-start the economy Saturday evening, or were they at Passionfish strictly to enjoy the much-heralded cuisine?

Perhaps both, but probably the latter, we thought, as we tore into our appetizer of baked gorgonzola with curried greens and golden chutney salad ($8). What a terrific blending of flavors!

We looked around at neighboring tables to see what had enticed other patrons. Fish dishes were at almost every table. We've dined on seafood at Passionfish a number of times and have always been delighted. Chef/owner Ted Walter really knows what he's doing.

On the dinner menu (at Passionfish they print new menus daily) were Monterey Albacore tuna ($15), Argentinian langoustinos ($18), Monterey sea bass ($16), Monterey petrale sole and Monterey sand dabs ($15). We first opted for the petrale sole, even though it came with "farmers market" ratatouille — eggplant in any form is not high on our personal hit parade — but were told the restaurant had just sold out of it.

The sea bass was offered with snap peas, which didn't appeal, and we weren't in the mood for either tuna or prawns, so we did the unthinkable in a seafood grill: We ordered an Angus rib eye, which came with a portobello fritter, potato latke and a gorgonzola-basil butter ($19).

The rib eye steak, billed as one of the most tender and flavorful of steaks, was just that. But there's a reason a rib eye steak is flavorful — it has a high fat content. Our steak, which was quite small and fairly thin, was done exactly to our order. It went well with the potato latke and the baby portobello.

A little greenery on the plate would have been nice, but there was no garni of any kind, and the plating was prosaically home-style. We suspect the kitchen was turning out orders as fast as possible, and while not sacrificing quality of cooking, presentation was put aside to serve waiting patrons without too much delay. The preparation was perfect, and the flavors were all excellent.

Hungry for chicken, our dinner companion decided on a chicken breast ($13) which came with a smoked garlic potato cake, rosemary-infused chèvre, and red Swiss chard. The chèvre was made into a thin sauce served over the chicken breast. It was unusual and wonderful, and turned the chicken breast — which had been seared and then finished in the oven — into something very special.

We were delighted to see chard served with this combination of chicken and potato. Chard is the ubiquitous green vegetable in Italy's restaurants, and I am always surprised that it isn't served more often here. It goes well with fowl, meat or fish, and it's so easy to prepare. Morgan could personally eat this every day.

Another meat item on the menu caught our eye, and it sounds absolutely delicious: maple cured pork chop ($15) which comes with maple-bacon mustard, and Vermont cheddar baked pasta. That really is a winning autumnal combination.

For vegetarians, ravioli filled with sweet white corn and mascarpone ($13) was offered on Saturday's menu, served with tomato and arugula, and for those who like duck — which one doesn't often see on local menus — there was a duck thigh and leg served with paprika gratin potatoes and something called Tasmanian leatherwood honey sauce.

All of these combinations are extremely imaginative, and chef Ted Walter has built a solid reputation for his unique pairings.

Desserts run either $5 or $6. Because of our rich entrées, we decided to share an order of bananas sautéed with rum and lime, served over coconut ice cream. Delicious! And with perfect espressos, it went down easily, as our readers can well imagine.

Few restaurants are literally packed these days, with patrons waiting in the vestibule. But Passionfish's comfortable banquettes were full in the waiting area and 130 diners were at table in the four rooms that comprise the restaurant's eating area. This patronage speaks very well for Chef Walter, indeed.

We must commend manager Cindy Walter, the reception hostess and waitstaff. All are thoughtful and friendly and know how to serve graciously. Be sure to call for reservations. This is one popular restaurant.

He's spent 25 years in law enforcement with several agencies — including police departments in Gonzales and Watsonville and the Santa Cruz Sheriff's Department — and served as sergeant, lieutenant, captain and chief.

He holds a bachelor's degree in criminal justice from CSU Sacramento, a master's in public administration from Golden Gate University and a certificate from the FBI National Academy at Quantico, Va.

Community policing is his strength, according to Carmel City Administrator Rich Guillen — one of the reasons the city selected him from more than 70 applicants for the $102,972-a-year job.

In interviews, Rawson "appeared to be a very person, a very calm person, which I think suits Carmel-by-the-Sea," Guillen said.

An extensive background check, including a polygraph test, physical examination, site visit at the City of Indio and interviews with staff, officers, neighbors and community members there, confirmed Guillen's impression.

"Based on all that background, what really came out as his forte is he's really community oriented, which is desirable for us," Guillen said. "He's very honest, has a high level of integrity, and of all the people we talked to, nobody gave us any negative information. All spoke very highly of him and were very sad he was leaving."

Indio's city manager told Guillen that if he were leaving for another city, he'd do everything in his power to take Rawson with him. And police officers in Indio "felt he knows how to handle the tough situations but has a team approach and a calm approach to finding solutions," Guillen said.

Rawson's immediate plans at Carmel P.D. appear to reflect those priorities: He said he wants to walk through Carmel's business district in uniform and introduce himself to the people who live, work or shop downtown.

"It's really important to be visible in the community and hear what people have to say about public safety and other issues, and how police can play a role in ensuring our services are the very best possible," he said.

After all, he said, "I want to make sure everybody understands that a police chief, in my opinion, is ultimately responsible for the actions of the police department."

Although the small city of Carmel and its 24-member police department will be a different world from the 70,000-resident City of Indio and its accompanying urban issues like gang violence (not to mention its 100-plus degree heat), Rawson said his philosophy carries over.

"Obviously there are not as intense crime issues, but that doesn't change the fact that we need to be as vigilant as possible and provide the best service," he said. "That's been my motto all along, and it will transfer to Carmel — it's just different kinds of things we'll be focused on."

Rawson said he's met many of Carmel's finest and is impressed not only with their commitment but with the city government and residents in general.

"Carmel is a community that has done an exemplary job of preserving its quality of life," he said.

Rawson will finish up his work in Indio this month and head north with his wife of 20 years, Laurie, and three children: Matthew, 15; Alexis, 10; and Joshua, 2.

"I'm very happy and blessed," he said. "I am sort of down to the last stage of my career — I'm 46 years old — and I'm planning to make this the last stop."

"I wanted to make sure we got the best for Carmel," Guillen said, "and I think we did."

New faces joining city's forest and beach, cultural commission

By TAMARA GRIPPI

A CALIFORNIA State Department of Fish and Game biologist and a landscape designer will be the two new faces on the Carmel Forest and Beach Commission, the city council decided Oct. 9.

Voting unanimously, the council also approved Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud's recommendations for three new members on the city's community and cultural commission.

McCloud decided to postpone appointments of new members to the historic preservation committee, planning commission and design review board until after Jan. 1 so the teams already in place can complete the city's local coastal plan by the end of the year, as promised.

McCloud said incumbents Ralph Tober, Wendy Banks, Frank Wasko and Bill Strid all agreed to extend their terms for 90 days.

Meanwhile, reporting for duty on the Forest and Beach Commission this week will be fisheries biologist Kevan Urquhart and landscape designer and Master Gardener Kathleen Coss.

New on the community and cultural commission are attorney Carol Hilburn, who lives in Harmony House — built in 1922 by Carmel Bach Festival founders Dene Denny and Hazel Watrous — and who spent 21 years representing the Southland Corporation (7-Eleven, Inc.), Roger Fremier, chair of the photography department at Monterey Peninsula College and veteran of the Carmel City Cultural Commission from 1980-1989 and Lucia Dahlstrand, who moved to Carmel from Colorado two years ago after a long career as a civic volunteer.

The terms of longtime members of the community and cultural commission, Linda Anderson (who served 13 years), Francyne Laney (five years) and Elisabeth Ungaretti (five years), as well as the terms of forest and beach commissioners Clayton Anderson (five years) and Roy Thomas (16 years), all expire this month.

FROM ONE SAINT BERNARD TO ANOTHER

TIRELESS VOLUNTEER and neighbor par excellence Becky Hanna, one of the founders of Carmel's Project St. Bernard, received a big thank you at the Oct. 10 council meeting from a fitting source: PJ the Saint Bernard.

Hanna helped organize the neighbors-helping-neighbors group back in 1993 and has spent the better part of the last decade leading the group's efforts to take care of elderly residents living alone.

Project St. Bernard relies on a network of volunteers on every block in Carmel to keep an eye on the needs of their neighbors. In 1997, the California League of Cities honored the St. Bernards with the Helen Putman Award for Outstanding Achievement in Community Service.

Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud thanked Hanna for her devotion to all the Carmel residents who benefit from the neighbor-to-neighbor program.

"Simon and Schuster's Guide to Dogs says it all," McCloud said. "A St. Bernard is very good with people."

Monday. "I don't even like to go in there. It's just the cruellest sight in the world."

As he spoke, a procession of heavy trucks loaded with crumpled metal headed north on Greenwich Street. Behind them, at the edges of the colossal pile of debris, large cranes lifted the big pieces onto flatbed trailers. Bulldozers scooped at the rest while emergency workers, aided by specially trained dogs, tried to collect human remains. They worked alongside FBI investigators who searched for remnants of the doomed aircraft and other clues about what happened on Sept. 11. There are also valuables to be recovered, including $240 million in gold bars in a vault under one of the destroyed trade center buildings. The work goes on 24 hours a day. So far, only about ten percent of the once-proud skyscrapers has been removed.

The World Trade Center itself — two towers and five smaller buildings — was almost completely destroyed. And most of the buildings in the surrounding neighborhood were also damaged by fire or by the lethal debris that rained down. Some of those buildings will be closed for years. But at 190 Broadway — a 40-story office building with a view directly into ground zero — a sign proudly proclaimed, "We're open for business!"

One block south, another tall office building was having its gleam restored by window washers suspended high overhead. At small shops, dust was being cleared from display cases, inventory was being restored and hopes were up.

"Things are better this week, and maybe even better next week," said the manager at a luggage store just a few blocks from the holocaust.

On some corners, flags, patriotic pins and memorial postcards of the once gleaming trade center towers are offered by street vendors.

For a while, they and hundreds of other businesses will have to rely on meager foot traffic, because a large area of lower Manhattan — from city hall, south — is still closed to cars. Four weeks with no customers has clearly devastated scores of small businesses, which shuttered with no sign of life through the grimy windows. The embattled district is not only hard to get to, it's even harder to stay in... because of the smell.

The first thing you notice is the odor of hot metal — from dozens of blowtorches laboring to cut the trade center's steel into manageable pieces.

Some of the skyscrapers' debris is still smoldering, emitting an acrid aroma that resembles burning plastic or an electrical fire.

A gentle rain Saturday morning helped clean the air and sidewalks, but suspended grit — the ubiquitous remains of 220 concrete floors, each one an acre in size, pulverized as the twin towers fell — still flies in the eyes and of pedestrians.

And worst of all, there's the sickly sweet smell of death, mercifully faint because of the cold weather, but horrifying nonetheless. After 15 minutes or so you can taste it as well as smell it.

"It's making me really sick," said one little girl, bundled against the morning chill on Vesey Street.

Many of the pedestrians wear dust masks as they hurry by. But as they make their way down lower Broadway — just a block away from the World Trade Center — they stop at each intersection when the hellish landscape to the west comes into view. Most just stare,

Most just stare, quietly

conversing with a companion or with a stranger.

Some cry out when they behold the destruction.

Others simply cry.

quietly conversing with a companion or with a stranger. Some cry out when they behold the destruction. Others simply cry.

An older black man leaned against the police barricade on Cortlandt Street, gazing up at the empty stretch of sky where his office had been. "I worked right there, on the 60th floor. My wife told me not to come down here, but I had to see it for myself," he explained.

Another man pulled out his camera to record the memory.

"No pictures, man. You're not supposed to be taking pictures," scolded a homeless man. "The mayor said no pictures."

For many on the streets around the World Trade Center, the mental images of vast, intentional destruction and mass murder will be enough. And everywhere, the somber faces of the onlookers are framed by the smiling faces of the innocent dead. On wall after wall, posters plead for help finding missing loved ones — people who by now, it must be admitted, are gone forever. Worn by the wind and the rain and stripped of their hope, the posters have been transformed into memorials.

"Please help find John Ramos," pleads one, beneath a photo of a handsome, smiling man in his 30s.

"If you have seen Kenny Link, please call right away."

"Lealla Seth is missing. Last seen at World Trade Center."

"Roger Mark Rasweiler, an employee of Marsh McLennan."

"John Salamons didn't come home," says the forlorn caption on another poster, along with a photo of a man holding two young children.

Thousand of posters, poems and letters from across the nation have also been taped to the walls, offering solace and support for the families of the missing and for the whole city.

"I hope the children get new moms and dads," says one note from a San Jose third grader, taped to the wall of the Canal Street post office along with a hand-drawn card that says, simply, "Oregon loves New York."

While the city dwellers keep up their vigil for the dead, on street corners, at fancy shops and at the airport, soldiers with loaded M16 rifles and 9mm pistols stand guard.

Even the children seem happy to see them.

For miles around the destroyed World Trade Center, posters mourning the dead and offering solace to the living have been put up on vacant walls, like this one at the Canal Street post office. At first, the posters sought help finding the missing. As the weeks passed along with the hope, the posters became memorials to the victims of the Sept. 11 terrorist attack.

for that performance.

She doesn't fault NPS for the trouble caused by security needs, but hopes some sort of resolution can be found.

"It's totally understandable and we, along with everyone else, want to work toward as positive an effect with other theaters and other companies as possible," she said, adding that the Carmel Ballet Academy's 100-seat theater is open for rent by small groups.

While the Carmel Bach Festival's Nana Faradani hopes security restrictions will be lifted by the time the festival gets underway next July, she said she wants to work with other groups to develop some sort of interim plan.

"It's as much of a problem for NPS as it is for us because their fundraising arm, Club Del Monte, can't make money," Faradani said. "So it's a problem for all of us."

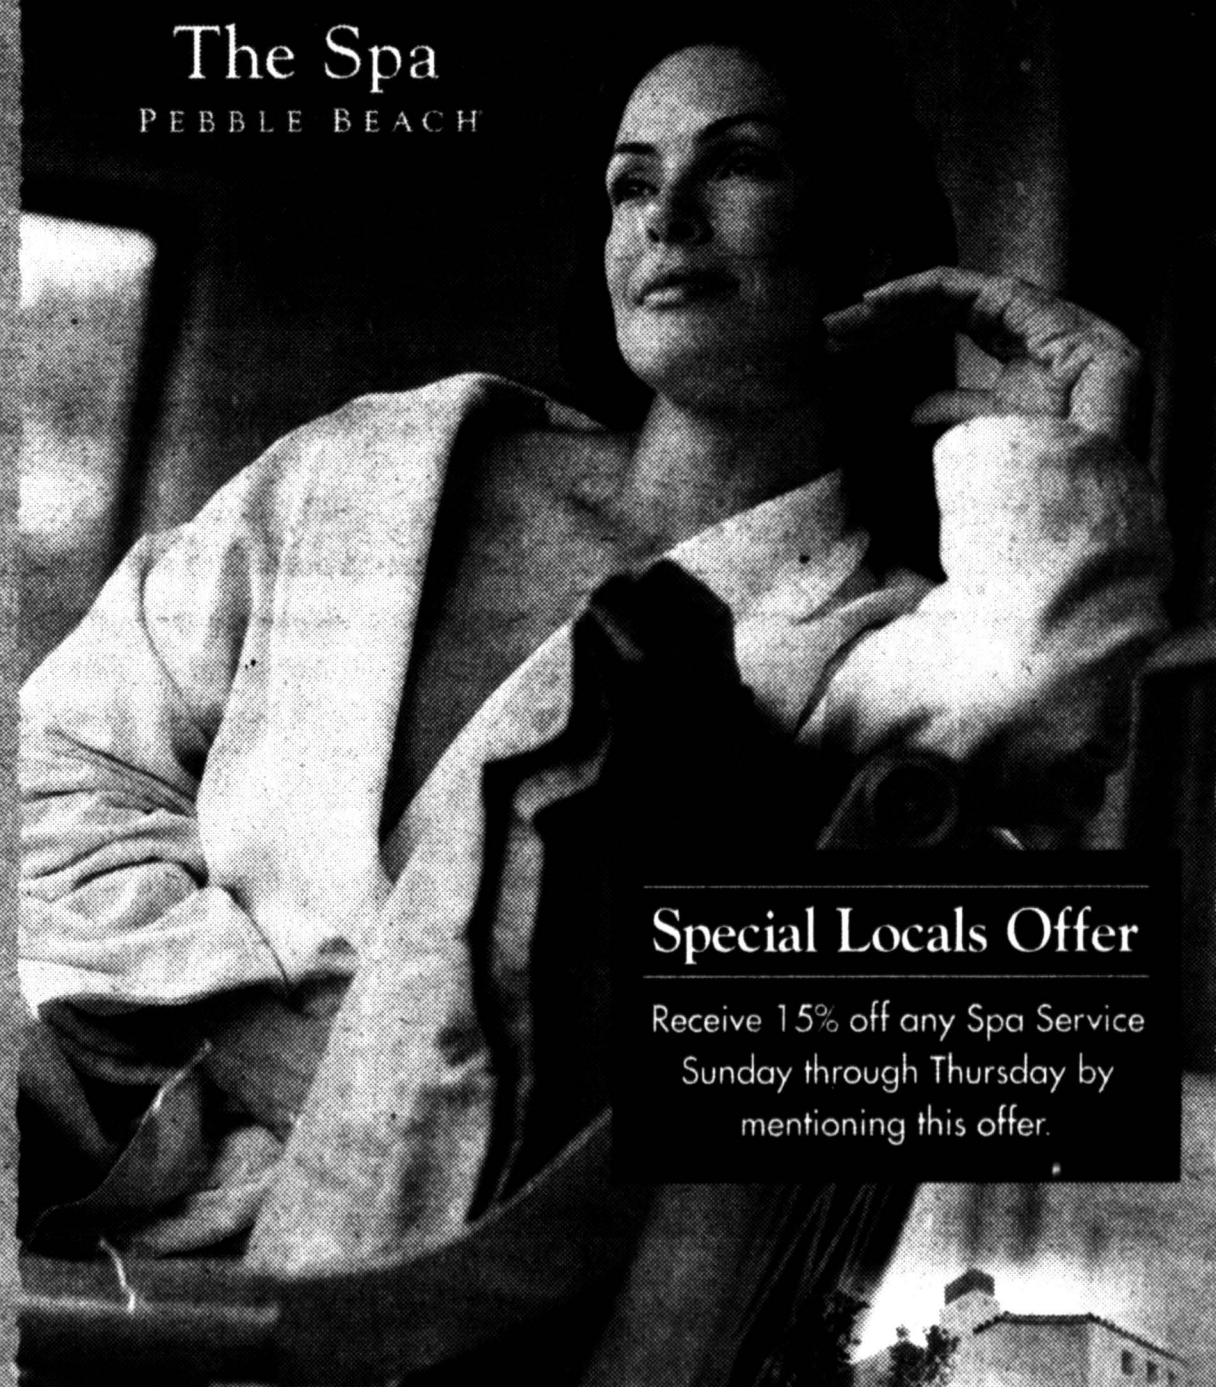

Club Del Monte, which hosts NPS' popular Sunday brunch and provides catering services for weddings and other events, has devised ways to handle the events already scheduled, according to spokeswoman Kim Anderson. "But Sunday brunch is canceled until further notice," she said.

Haag said that so long as the threat level remains high, the access list and I.D. procedures will remain in place. And moving to the highest threat level, Delta, would further restrict access, he said.

"We're doing our very best to accommodate our customers, past and present," he said.

Irresponsible reporting

ON THE FRONT page of many American newspapers this week was a fascinating item about the opening of a new phase of the war against terrorists. The U.S. military, the various articles said, was about to start using "bunker buster" bombs to hit the terrorists in their underground hideouts in Afghanistan. On its face, the article could be criticized for helping the people who blew up the World Trade Center escape justice by warning them about what was coming next.

But that wasn't the worst thing about the "bunker buster" story. The articles, accompanied in some cases by artful color graphics, went on to disclose very specific information about the capabilities of the "bunker buster" bombs — that they can penetrate 19.7 feet of rock or 98.4 feet of earth before detonating, for example — information that Osama bin Laden and his Taliban servants will find very useful as they try to stay alive.

Such precise information about the performance of a specific weapon was completely meaningless to the U.S. newspaper reader, who doesn't care (or have any need to know) whether bunker buster bombs can penetrate 15 feet, 50 feet or 150 feet. There was no reason to include the information in the stories — except that it was somehow available. This was just the latest example of America's self-indulgent news media, which through decades of seemingly immutable peace and prosperity, have come to regard themselves as above the rules of common sense and immune from the consequences of their actions.

Twenty years ago, American reporters in Israel were subject to very strict censorship during the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. Twice a day, military censors arrived at the bureaus of NBC, ABC and CBS in Tel Aviv to review videotapes and read scripts that were being prepared for satelliting to the morning or evening news shows in the United States. From the beginning, the censors laid down clear rules: no identifying the location of specific Israeli units; no showing Israeli soldiers and any body of water (which might divulge the soldiers' location); no video pictures of more than one tank at a time, etc. The rules were easy to follow, did almost nothing to diminish the usefulness of the news to the public, and were adhered to by everybody involved. The American people, watching at home, were probably unaware of the existence of this military censorship.

At the same time, the Israeli censors also tried to engage in political censorship, which some reporters vigorously resisted. At one point, the censor ordered one network producer not to send to the U.S. a compelling videotape showing a border patrolman on the West Bank beating a Palestinian demonstrator. By surreptitious means, the producer arranged for the video to be sneaked out of Israel and it was featured on the evening news in America.

Should there be official censorship of the American news media during the campaign against terrorists? Certainly the stakes — thousands of innocent lives to be lost in the next terrorist attack — are high enough to justify it. But rather than seeing military officers posted at NBC, CBS, ABC, Fox, CNN and the major newspapers, it is vastly preferable for American reporters to police themselves. They should not shrink from reporting important political stories, no matter how critical they may be of our government. But reporting of military plans, troop locations and the precise capabilities of our weapons endangers lives and should be scrupulously avoided by the reporters, editors, television anchors and producers themselves.

Of course, we can always hope that our government is one step ahead of the news media, and that the performance figures for the "bunker buster" bombs reported this week were wrong.

Plan B a 'scam'

Dear Editor,

The long awaited Plan B, touted as the alternative to the dam, is out. It's a scam. It is not an alternative. The cost is equal to the cost of the dam but it does little to improve the health of the Carmel River. "Plan B" arrives at the required 10,730 acre-feet that Cal-Am has been declared to be illegally pumping by getting the State Water Resources Control Board to authorize pumping of an additional 3,000 acre-feet from the Carmel River aquifer. Environmentalists should be up in arms. The study, costing Cal-Am water users $1.75 million, calls for a desal plant but doesn't include any of the environmental considerations that would be necessary to discharge the brine into the Marine Sanctuary. Additional water would come from two other sources; first, from expansion of the waste water recovery system for use by irrigation customers in Pebble Beach, Pacific Grove and private well operators in Carmel Valley and, second, by pumping millions of gallons of water from the Carmel River in the winter and pumping it back in the summer. Now we learn from a recent Pine Cone article that there is no room through Cañada Woods for the construction of the facilities it will take to implement this water transfer alternative. We need more water now to take care of the people that live here. Our saving grace now is the number of second-home owners that only live here occasionally. We need a dam now. Twenty years ago the voters formed the water management district to find new water. We have the permits for the dam. Let's use them.

Solution to skyjacking

Dear Editor,

There is a better solution to skyjacking than allowing weapons on board an airplane, even if those weapons are carried by pilots or air marshals.

EIR calls for mandatory preservation of old buildings

By MARY BROWNFIELD

ONLY MANDATORY preservation of all historic and potentially historic buildings in Carmel would provide maximum protection of the city's environment, according to a draft EIR released last month by the city of Carmel-by-the-Sea.

The EIR, prepared by the city planning department, says just a few buildings in town have "state, national or international" historic significance. But many "locally significant resources that represent the city's beginnings" are found in town. These buildings, under the California Environmental Quality Act, must be protected by a mandatory plan, the EIR says, unless the city adopts a "statement of overriding considerations" to explain why it doesn't think the city government should require their preservation.

The draft EIR, released Sept. 7, analyzes the city proposed historic preservation program, which would operate with a variety of designations: Mandatory listing of structures that fall into the categories of "first, last, only, rare or most significant," and listing of locally significant buildings on the Carmel Register.

"However, for most identified historic resources, listing on the register would remain voluntary," the EIR says. Under that system, the overall impact to Carmel community character would be "expected to be small," the EIR concludes. Still, the loss of individual potentially historic structures could result in "significant environmental impacts."

Some mitigations are offered, such as relocating a resource, documenting it, paying fees to the city as compensation for destroying a resource, and salvaging and reusing materials from a resource, but none would make the impacts less than significant, according to the draft EIR.

The city can approve an historic preservation program that is largely voluntary, but only after affirming that "environmental, legal, technical, or economic factors," support it, the EIR says.

Written comments on the EIR should be submitted to the city by Oct. 22.

The Carmel City Council will hold a workshop on the program in City Council Chambers at 5 p.m. the following day. The Carmel Historic Preservation Committee will review the study Nov. 19 and the planning commission will discuss it Nov. 21. Copies can be read at Harrison Memorial Library or City Hall, or can be purchased at Copies-by-the-Sea for $7.43.

Under that system, the overall impact to Carmel community character would be "expected to be small," the EIR concludes. Still, the loss of individual potentially historic structures could result in "significant environmental impacts."

1. Seal all access to the cockpits so they can only be opened by the pilots at their discretion.

2. Attach a canister of swift-acting, sleep-inducing gas to the air filtration system that is activated on command by the pilots and released into the passenger area.

3. Everyone goes to "sleep" immediately, including potential skyjackers and hysterical passengers. This also eliminates gun battles that might bring the aircraft down and cause injuries and hysteria on board.

GATSBY LEVET, 16 (rear), Tearsa, 7 (left), and Armani, 3, describe themselves as sofa dogs, but officially, these svelte siblings are Italian miniature greyhounds.

In days of yore, their ancestors were companions to royalty. These three owe their fealty to Mom Helen and Dad John, and Mom and Dad treat the three like royalty. Symbiosis reigns in the Levet castle.

Gatsby the elder was skin and bones when Mom and Dad came upon him at a Tahoe animal shelter when he was just six. On the way home, he sat on Mom's lap, embraced her around the neck with his front legs, and put his head against her cheek. He had been saved.

Both Mom and Dad think Gatsby must have been a companion to a hearing impaired person at one time: When the phone rings, he runs to the telephone, touches it with his paw and tries to get their attention. And when Mom or Dad are feeling a little low, Gatsby senses it and climbs up on their laps for a cuddle, moaning doggie encouragement.

Armani — he who appears to be wearing a tux — is the funniest of the three, although ever-so-distinguished. He loves his fuzzy, squeaky toys, and if Mom is reading, he'll get her attention by flicking a toy at her.

Tearsa — Gatsby and Armani's sister — who looks as if she's wearing a shrug sweater, isn't much interested in toys, but fancies herself the leader of the pack. She rules — most of the time.

These three extremely frisky minis love going to Carmel Beach three or four times a week and are always on the lookout for their favorite pals. When we encountered the mini troupe on Thursday, they were making friends with a charming little pug named Lily Dahl, playing hide and seek behind and between Mom and Dad's legs.

Fox Creek Ranch subdivision staves off death by request for EIR

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A CACHAGUA subdivision's lengthy trip through the county planning process got longer Oct. 9 when the board of supervisors unanimously decided to let Fred Bates and his Fox Creek Ranch LLC prepare an environmental impact report on a 13-home subdivision proposed for the 276-acre Fox Creek Ranch property.

The project was first approved by the planning commission in November 2000, but that decision was appealed to the board of supervisors on Feb. 20 by project opponents. The board sent it back to the planning commission with the request that issues of public notice, as well as zoning, biological and visual impacts, septic system design, water and inclusionary housing, be addressed.

When the planning commission got the project the second time, they reversed their earlier decision and rejected the subdivision plan on a unanimous vote.

Saying he wanted to respond to "numerous unsubstantiated and erroneous statements" made by members of the public during the June 27 planning commission hearing, Bates appeared before the board Oct. 9 and requested permission to conduct an EIR.

Cachagua resident Rod McMahan, an opponent of the Fox Creek project, called Bates' comments "repugnant and errant," but said they were "not unexpected from a bully organization used to getting what it wants."

Several Cachagua residents supported the commission's denial, saying the project is inappropriate for an area designated for rural grazing and would create traffic hazards, ruin views, use too much water and result in the destruction of riparian habitat.

County counsel Adrienne Grover backed staff's recommendation that supervisors not kill the project.

"Given that the bases for the planning commission's denial are strongly rooted in environmental concerns, staff recommends pursuing the EIR rather than an outright denial today," she said.

Supervisor Dave Potter disagreed.

"This project has already tested the process twice," he said. "It's a square peg trying to go into a round hole, and I'm not interested in trying to reconfigure the hole. If it doesn't fit, it doesn't fit."

Supervisor Judy Pennycook agreed and said the applicant should have ordered an EIR before appearing in front of the planning commission in June.

But after supervisor Lou Calcagno sided with Grover, Potter and Pennycook withdrew their motion to deny the project.

"I do so somewhat begrudgingly," Pennycook said.

The new motion to allow an EIR on the Fox Creek Ranch subdivision was passed unanimously by the board.

A plan to create 13 lots in the 276-acre Fox Creek Ranch property off Carmel Valley Road was headed for denial until the Monterey County Board of Supervisors voted to let the developer prepare an Environmental Impact Report to refute environmental concerns voiced by neighbors.

C.V. land owners can pull weeds, plant trees — but that's it — Supes decide

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THREE TIERRA Grande property owner can cross a 1-foot-wide "non-access" strip onto their 30-acre parcel, but they can't do any work on their land that would constitute "development," the Monterey County Board of Supervisors decided this week.

John and Martha Kenny and Barbara McFarland should be able to enter the property for non-development work such as fire prevention or replanting trees, but not to build anything, County Counsel Adrienne Grover recommended.

"It's not the county's position that John Kenny has to come back to the board of supervisors every time he wants access to the property," Grover said.

But removal of the non-access strip — imposed by the board of supervisors on a 1964 subdivision map — would require specific action by the board of supervisors and would likely trigger the California Environmental Quality Act, she said. If the owners want to build homes, she suggested that the access issue be addressed in conjunction with an application for the homes in order to avoid "piecemeal development."

Scott Sommer, attorney for Kenny, told the board, "We were informed [by the county counsel's office] he couldn't pass over the strip to even plant a tree."

Sommer thanked Grover for clarifying the county's position, but argued that it has ignored other non-access strips in the Tierra Grande subdivision in the past.

"Dozens of people have been living and building, regardless of the non-access strips," he said.

The Kennys and McFarland have taken the non-access issue to court to ask a Superior Court judge to let them cross it to use their property. That issue is set for a hearing Oct. 12 before Judge Richard Silver.

Code violations

Grover also said Kenny was facing code-enforcement violations, including removing six trees without a permit and placing two water tanks on the property after his three exploratory wells were drilled.

Although the county granted Kenny a temporary, 90-day license last April to drill wells on the parcel and he had the required permits from the health department, he exceeded them when he installed water tanks, according to Grover.

Kenny responded that no building permit is required for a water tank, according to the county planning department and the Uniform Building Code.

Grover acknowledged that while that may be true for other property owners, it's not true for Kenny.

"Even though someone said ordinarily you wouldn't need a permit for a water tank, this is a specific situation," she said. Had Kenny asked for an interpretation of the 90-day license rules, he would have been properly informed, she added.

"I put the tank there for the seven-hour pump test," Kenny said after the meeting. "If I had let that water run down the hill, they would have crucified me."

The supervisors unanimously adopted the resolution that acknowledges the Kennys and McFarland have limited access to their property, but reiterated a specific board action is required to remove the non-access strip.

COASTAL PLAN GETS ONE MORE PERUSAL — NEW DRAFT DUE OCT. 15

By MARY BROWNFIELD

PUBLIC COMMENT on the Coastal Implementation Plan — which includes new and existing city codes that will be used to back up the Land Use Plan in the city's Local Coastal Plan — continued Oct. 10 in front of the Carmel Planning Commission.

Very few public comments were made on the 500-page plan and its revisions, which included language supporting performing-arts spaces in the city and prohibiting tract homes.

Existing city rules for the beach, which limit fires, horses, dogs and alcoholic beverages, as well as ordinances on parking and tree trimming, were added to the implementation plan.

Only three members of the public commented on the plan — one asked about the parking of inoperable vehicles, another asked for a definition of vehicles for hire, and Joyce Stevens, representing Monterey Pine Forest Watch, requested the pine be afforded special status in the plan. Stevens' group will submit specific comments and suggestions before the Carmel City Council holds a hearing on the plan Dec. 6, she said.

Commissioner Pope Coleman said coastal commission staff had objected to limits on using the beach, a position with which he agreed.

"I think that on balance, the California Coastal Commission is right and we're wrong about how we use our beach," he said, referring to coastal staff's argument that fires should be allowed everywhere on the beach instead of just south of 10th Avenue. "I haven't heard an adequate defense."

Coleman also objected to the 10 p.m. cutoff for drinking alcohol on the beach.

"Planning staff and the consultant are being guided by the ordinances adopted by the city — most notably the Beach Master Plan and the Forest Management Plan," principal planner Brian Roseth responded. "We are taking our marching orders from those documents and it's part of this process, your process, to say whether we stay the course or modify."

Roseth said a second draft of the plan will be released Oct. 15, with further public comment to be taken during the commission's regular meeting Oct. 24. A revised draft of the Coastal Land Use Plan will be released Oct. 22, according to Roseth, and the commission should finally take action on both documents during a special meeting Oct. 30.

Maggie Hardy appointed to California Coastal Commission

By PAUL MILLER

FORMER CARMEL planning commissioner Maggie Hardy was appointed last week as an alternate member of the California Coastal Commission by assembly speaker Robert Hertzberg.

Hardy, who left her job as development director of the Big Sur Land Trust last June and now resides in Humboldt County, said she has "always considered the coastal commission to be one of the most important bodies in California, because the integrity of California's coast depends on the integrity of the coastal commission."

Hardy is now employed as Head of University Advancement at Humboldt University in Arcata.

Hertzberg, who appoints four coastal commission members (one of his appointees is Monterey County Supervisor Dave Potter) and four alternates, has been her friend since she lived in Los Angeles and was active in Democratic Party politics, Hardy said. "I'm delighted he had the confidence in me to make the appointment."

Hardy, who has a master's degree in urban planning, lived in Carmel for nine years and served on the planning commission from 1992 until 1995.

Supervisors adopt official CEQA watchdog program

By MARY BROWNFIELD

TO COMPLY with a court settlement, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors unanimously adopted rules this week to make sure permit conditions to protect the environment aren't circumvented by builders and property owners who get permits to develop their land.

The supervisors adopted the program as part of the settlement of a lawsuit filed by Ed Leeper in April 2000 alleging the county violated the California Environmental Quality Act by not ensuring applicants were doing what the county required of them after approving their projects.

Planning director Scott Hennessy said the procedures outlined in the program are already in place in the department, but have now been defined and refined.

The program includes a standard agreement to implement a mitigation monitoring plan that would be signed by every applicant, as well as a "Verification of Condition Compliance/Non-Compliance" form to be used every time a county staffer checks to see if an applicant is meeting the conditions specified in a project's approval.

While staff from each land use agency — including environmental health, water resources and public works — would be responsible for monitoring the requirements imposed by their own departments, the planning department would oversee the entire process, according to Hennessy.

"This set of procedures documents the process — how land-use departments are integrated," said analyst Jean Getchell. "What this does is bring together land use and the EIR with an emphasis on clear, quantifiable, enforceable measures."

Getchell said the procedure would create a paper trail for every condition of approval on a project.

Hennessy also acknowledged the need to simplify conditions of approval.

"We need to eliminate the vast number of conditions and their complexity, for the landowner and for staff," he said. "We are working to standardize and simplify some conditions and eliminate redundant conditions."

Carmel Valley resident Fran Farina questioned the county's ability to monitor requirements already in place, such as what she said were 156 conditions attached to the approval of the Cañada Woods North project.

Without discussion, the board of supervisors adopted the mitigation monitoring and reporting program.

offer comes in on the home you want to sell.

Until recently, when there was simply not enough time to get across town (or across the country) to sign an important paper, golden opportunities could be lost forever. That's a thing of the past, now. In June, 2000, President Clinton signed into law a bill that permits electronic signatures to carry the same legal weight as the traditional "paper" signatures that have always been required for legally binding documents.

Although the law went into effect on October 1, it's still not clear exactly what form the signatures can take, or whether additional validation will be necessary. But electronic real estate transactions are already a reality in our industry, and you should be aware that when you sign your name to a legal document that will be e-mailed or faxed, rather than sent by regular mail, it can be just as binding as any other legal paper. (Of course, the law also protects consumers who don't want to do business using an electronic signature.)

As a real estate professional, I'm dedicated to helping you to meet your real estate goals in any way I can. If you need real estate information or assistance in selling your existing home or finding a new home, please call me at 831-622-4875. There's no obligation for a consultation.
